

Fall is the Best Time to Plant!

Here's Why:

Roots continue to grow in the winter after the top goes dormant, giving your new plants a better chance to survive the dry, hot summer next year. With the sap less active in the plants during the cool months, trees and shrubs are far less vulnerable to transplant shock during planting. Winter rainfall means you don't have to water as much, saving you time and money!